Maui Is Scouted as Site for Micronesian Conference

A high-level international conference which could possibly determine the future political status of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands is believed to be tentatively slated for early October here.

The Star-Bulletin today learned from reliable sources that the Island of Maui, and more specifically

Hana, is being scouted as a possible conference site.

Although the details as to the nature and date of this conference is at best sketchy at this point because of the secrecy of the meetings, sources here indicate that Oct. 4 is one of the dates being considered for this set of international negotiations.
