Reaction Favorable

SAIPAN—Immediate reaction to the lifting of the "most favored nation" clause limiting foreign investment in Micronesia was generally—but not universally—favorable.

"I think this is an excellent thing for the Trust Territory," said High Commissioner Edward E. Johnston. "This is something that has never been outlawed. It was simply a matter of policy authorized by a clause in the trusteeship agreement, authorizing the United States to give preference to its own citizens."

"I think the district Economic Development Boards still should not hesitate to reject application. They will probably look on other foreign investment the same as they have the U.S., bringing in those that allow adequate Micronesian participation."

Said Sen. Edward Pangelinan, who heads the Marianas Future Status negotiators, "I think they've opened a Pandora's box and I don't know how we're going to control this monster."

His colleague from Yap, Sen. John Mangefel, concurred. "I don't agree with it yet. It shouldn't be lifted at this time," he said.

"I know the people in Yap won't support the idea. I think the Congress might make some restrictions, but it will be difficult because of the division of opinion on this in the Congress."

"We should be thankful to the Interior Secretary for lifting this finally. It's what is needed if we are to become part of the community of the world," responded Marshalls Sen. Amata Kabua, chairman of the Senate Committee on Resources and Development.

"I think we'll receive an absolute flood of applications for foreign investment," said TT Resources and Development Director Wyman Zachary. "And the lifting of the ban should also bring to the fore some arrangements we suspected in the past that can now be made public."

"The majority of the applications will probably come from Japan, but I also expect some from Taiwan, Korea, possibly Australia."

"This will probably be felt very strongly in all the districts," said Zachary. "Yet control will still remain with the Economic Development Board in each district. They are the ones who will really bear the brunt of this."

Zachary stressed his personal hope that land ownership will remain in Micronesian hands.

Pedro Dela Cruz, chairman of the Marianas Economic Development Board, said the new policy "offers us an opportunity to bargain for foreign investments that we desire. But we have to be very careful. We don't want to see this area become another Honolulu or Guam."

Zachary also said it was his understanding that news of the new TT investment policy would be disseminated in Japan and elsewhere in the Far East.
