Dear Colleague:

I am writing to request your support for an amendment to H.J. Res. 549, a joint resolution to approve a Commonwealth Covenant for the Northern Marianas.

The purpose of this amendment (a copy of which is attached) is to defer approval of the Marianas Covenant until the Administration submits to Congress an agreement or agreements covering the future political status of the whole Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (known as Micronesia). This will enable Congress to evaluate the whole package at one time. It would also permit the Northern Marianas people to opt for union with the rest of Micronesia or for reunification with Guam if they decided, in the interim, that either of these alternatives appealed to them. From the standpoint of U.S. interests, I believe that either of these latter arrangements would be preferable to creating a separate U.S. Commonwealth in the far Western Pacific for the 14,000 Northern Marianas people.

The United States has undertaken a responsibility to prepare its Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands for self-government. The basic U.S. defense interest in this vast region is to have access to and through the area in time of U.S. defense emergency and to prevent other powers from establishing military bases there. I believe that these responsibilities and interests can best be reconciled by concluding an agreement (or agreements) with the representatives of the Micronesian people covering their future political status -- one that will pave the way for friendly and mutually beneficial U.S.-Micronesian relations after our Trust agreement is terminated.

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands consists of three Island groups: the Northern Marianas (population 14,000) and the Marshalls and Carolines (with a combined population of 100,000). In a June 1975 plebiscite, the people of the Northern Marianas clearly indicated their support of the "Marianas Covenant," which would grant them Commonwealth status, U.S. citizenship, and generous financial benefits in return for a U.S. right to convert two-thirds of Tinian Island into an American military base.

The Defense Department indicates it has suspended earlier plans to build a major base there and now wants the land mainly for peacetime maneuvers, storage facilities, and various other military contingencies.

In 1974, the U.S. Government and representatives of the Congress of Micronesia reached tentative agreement on a Compact of Free Association. Under this arrangement, an independent, self-governing Micronesia would have the right to withdraw unilaterally from its association with the United States. Further action on this Compact has been delayed, in part, by the Marianas Covenant plebiscite (last June) and by the Micronesian Constitutional Convention, which has just completed its work. I have been told that the financial terms under which free association would take place is one of the main issues still to be ironed out between the United States and Congress of Micronesia representatives. I have also been told that agreement on a free association compact might be achieved in a year or two and possibly even sooner. Hence, the delay in approval of the Marianas Covenant, which I propose in this amendment, is not necessarily of long duration.

It has sometimes been suggested that the Secretary of Interior lacks the authority to grant the Northern Marianas a separate administration from the rest of Micronesia until Congress approves the Marianas Covenant. However, I have been informed by the Department of Interior Office of Territorial Affairs that the Secretary can proceed without further Congressional action. In any case, a sentence in this amendment makes clear that "Nothing in this joint resolution is intended by Congress to prevent or delay the institution of separate administration for the Northern Marianas..." It is my understanding that representatives of the Northern Marianas and of the Congress of Micronesia are currently negotiating the terms of separate administration for the Marianas and that they expect the results of their negotiations to be embodied in an order by the Secretary of Interior.

If you would like to join in co-sponsoring this amendment, please contact Peter A. Poole (x47917) in my office.

Sincerely yours,

Charles H. Percy
United States Senator
