Jurors comment on Simpson verdict

LOS ANGELES (AP) - One of two jurors who originally voted to convict O.J. Simpson of murder said she is satisfied with her ultimate decision to acquit him, even though she still believes Simpson "probably did it."

Another juror said it would have made a difference if she had heard Nicole Brown Simpson's friends recall how she had predicted that her ex-husband would one day kill her.

Anise Aschenbach, a 61-year-old white retired clerk, was one of two jurors who voted guilty in a straw poll at the start of deliberations.

In newspaper and TV interviews, she says she eventually voted to acquit Simpson because she did not think the evidence against him was convincing enough.

"I feel he probably did it, but the circumstantial evidence was just messed up," she told the Whittier Daily News Tuesday.

"I can't take it for granted that he didn't do it. Chances are good he did it, and that's a shame," she said. "It doesn't make me feel very good, but on the other hand, (Simpson's) not a serial killer. I'm happy with the outcome, and I feel that collectively, we did what we had to do."

She told KTTV in Los Angeles that she voted guilty in the straw poll to "inspire some conversation" in the hope that other jurors would convince her that "some of the evidence was more believable than it actually was."

Yolanda Crawford, a 25-year-old black hospital worker, said in an interview Tuesday with 'Dateline NBC' that she could have been swayed by comments from those who said outside court that Ms. Simpson predicted her own death at her ex-husband's hands.

"It probably would have made me look closer at Mr. Simpson, may have created a motive for him," she said. "It would have been in the back of my mind when we went in there."

But Crawford discounted testimony from Denise Brown that Simpson was abusive to his ex-wife, saying Simpson "wasn't there for domestic abuse, he was there for murder."

Crawford said the turning point for her was the glove demonstration, when Simpson struggled to pull on the blood-stained pair, then told jurors they were too small.

"It all started falling apart after the glove demonstration," she said. "I couldn't believe they had him try the gloves on not knowing the outcome ahead of time."

Crawford and Aschenbach reacted strongly to the tapes of retired police Detective Mark Fuhrman uttering a racial epithet he swore he hadn't used in 10 years.

"After that I couldn't sleep at night," Crawford said. "I would get maybe five hours of sleep and then I would wake up and it would be on my mind." Aschenbach told the Long Beach Press-Telegram that Fuhrman was "a vicious racist, and I wouldn't put (the possibility that he planted evidence) past him."

To critics who think Simpson's mostly black panel was influenced by race, Crawford said:

Ishibashi jury trial begins

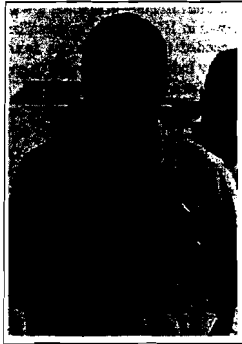

By Ferdie de la Torre
Variety News Staff

THE JURY trial in the Superior Court for Kojo Y. Ishibashi, a man arrested in Garapan last year for weapons and drug possession, started yesterday.

The government called its first witness—Detective Joaquin Dela Cruz Salas—who basically narrated how they executed the search at Ishibashi's property.

Salas said he arrested Ishibashi in Navy Hill after he heard through a radio from a raiding team member confirming that firearms were found at Ishibashi's property in Garapan.

David Wiseman, counsel for Ishibashi, said in his opening statements that the case is similar to O.J. Simpson's where there was "faulty police procedure."

"They charged Kojo of illegal possession of guns and ammunition. They were not Kojo's things," Wiseman argued.

Wiseman said the government first filed 12 counts against Ishibashi, including drug possession.

The Attorney General's Office, however, reduced the charges to seven then four counts, he said.

Wiseman said lately the AGO filed another amended information charging his client only with illegal possession of firearms and ammunition.

Following Wiseman's request, the Superior Court agreed to exclude witnesses from the trial so that they cannot hear the other witnesses testifying before them.

The case agent was asked to testify first to prevent the agent from acting as a summary witness to the benefit of other witnesses.

Wiseman also asked the court to prohibit consultations between the prosecutor and each of the government witnesses during the testimony.
