that has shown no shortage of surprises.

Earlier, some of his jurors explained for the first time why they acquitted him in the murders of his ex-wife and her friend. One said a cop lied, another was a racist, and the bloody gloves didn't fit either on Simpson's hands or at his estate—so she had to acquit.

Simpson, who wasn't seen during his second day of freedom, also offered a brief comment about his first reunion with his two small children, Sydney and Justin, since he was arrested for their mother's murder.

about prosecution claims that a shadowy figure seen moving across the driveway of Simpson's house was in fact Simpson returning from an attempt to hide a bloody glove.

Simpson said testimony from limousine driver Allan Park never showed this — only that there was a person near the front door.

"It was me — walking out of my front door, dropping my bags and going back in," he said. Simpson's defense had said that Simpson was racing around his house at about 11 p.m. packing for a bag of anyone else's intentions of what was said," Simpson said.

Simpson said he went back to his cell many nights and asked of the commentators: "Were they in the same court room that we were in today? Did they hear the testimony today?"

Simpson appeared eager to cut short the interview, saying, "I gotta go. I gotta go."

Simpson friend Robert Kardashian, meanwhile, was reportedly behind a $1 million photo package offer to the supermarket tabloids that promised exclu-

In their first full day free from sequestration, some jurors spoke out.

Brenda Moran, a black computer technician from South Central Los Angeles, said a glove found behind Simpson's mansion was key to her decision to acquit the former football star in the June 12, 1994, murders of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

"Somebody planted it," Moran said, signaling she agreed with the defense contention that Simpson was framed by rogue cops.

The juror discussed the case with more than 100 reporters, who were assembled on the roof doubt from the beginning" about the prosecution's evidence, including the blood.

"If he committed such a bloody crime, then there should have been more blood in that Bronco than this just little speck that we saw," she said.

At Simpson's estate, more than a hundred reporters gathered outside the wall that Detective Mark Fuhrman scaled the morning after the murders.

Simpson was nowhere to be seen. A rumored news conference never materialized. And his representatives have suggested if he does speak it will be in a pay-per-view TV special, similar to those staged for boxing matches. The event could net Simpson amended version of House Bill 9-371 otherwise known as the Commonwealth Gaming Control Act.

"If there is (a pro-casino coalition), I am not aware of any. I made a statement already in the past that there's definitely a possibility that there might be now a majority of the members of the House who'll probably be willing to support the casino because of the governor's persistent and very strong lobbying. Coming from our governor, of course, that's a very powerful position," Benavente said.

be decided by the people, and not by both houses of legislature.

"I've always pushed for the people, if there's going to be a casino - if casino is going to be allowed in the Commonwealth - I would like to see the people voting for that issue and not 18 members of the House, nine members of the Senate," Benavente said.

"The members of the House of Representatives or the legislature really do not have the right to make that kind of decision. I don't think that 27 bodies have a right to make that reiterated.

He also berated the Senate for passing the gaming bill.

"It seems like at the Senate anything is possible. It's a little different at the House. I know that there is suspicion that there's going to be a coup or that there's a coalition possibly formed to push casino in the House of Representatives. Again, I'm not aware of it. I do not believe that there's going to be a coup," Benavente explained at length.

for me at this time. It's something that I feel is a decision that I should take and that's what I'm doing," he stressed.

He reported that the GOP has been getting a lot of positive feedback from the people.

"It looks good for the Republican party. I'm sure that there's a lot of people that are disappointed with our administration and they are in fact turning to the Republican party for supporting the party," he said.

Benavente also claimed port coming from our own community but you can never tell with the elections. It's very hard to tell. We just have to work hard," Benavente said.

He was of the opinion that people now are voting not so much on promises but on performance. "People now are not too concerned about what more promises we can offer. I think people are looking now at what the Democrat administration is doing to our community," said Benavente.
